Set Forest Fire For Film Picture

A forest fire set out and fought for the purpose of providing a film picture for the amusement and instruction of an audience is a rather unusual proceeding, but this is what occurred recently in the national forest east of Cottage Grove. Under the direction of State Biologist W. L. Finlay, a tract of four or five hundred acres was burned, the fire being fought by a crew of seventy trained men who in their efforts expended all of the modern methods of fire fighting while the fire was photographed by a motion picture camera.

The timber which was selected was a body of very defective forest which it had been planned to cut and burn as slashings, but as the other use was proposed, the few trees which could be used for lumber were cut and removed from the flames and the fire set out. Although the timber was unfit for use, it made an excellent fire, and within a few minutes a fire which, if it were set in some localities, would be very serious, was in progress. After it had obtained a good start the men began fighting it. Every means employed in extinguishing a large fire were brought into use before the camera, and a very clear idea may be obtained from the films of the methods which the forest department teaches to its rangers.

After the film has been developed it will be taken to the many theatres in the state, where it will be displayed in order to educate the people of Oregon as to the work of the forest department. Many thousands of dollars' worth of timber are destroyed annually in the county and state to a great extent on account of the carelessness of those who are camping or spending a few days in the forests. These pictures, which show the great damage which is done by such fires when set in a valuable body of timber, will doubtless prove a great benefit to the forest department in its efforts to prevent the losses.

Big Slaughter In Fields Sunday

The birds were on the move yesterday. Owing to the concurrence of Sunday and the opening day of the shooting season, the fields were full of hunters. One huntsman said: "I saw seven gunners chasing a poor little quail up a gulch," and the ratio would about hold good throughout this section. Even at that many of the hunters brought back good-sized bags of quail and pheasants. So good, in fact, that it is doubtful if the hunter who was too good a church member to hunt on Sunday will have much of a show of filling the family larder. Pheasants are much scarcer than last year. Most of the landowners down along Bear creek have forbidden hunting on their lands.
